One of the top advantages of the programs presented in this review is the fact that they all offer online backups for Microsoft Office applications. Backups are essentially duplicate copies of the files your company makes use of. They are stored on a hard drive, which enables the company to try and access and recover them in the event that a user deletes an important document or a computer fails. Online backups are useful because they let you store data on the cloud, where it can be stored and retrieved regardless of the physical location of the system it's hosted on. The cloud can hold a wealth of information, from personal files to all the documents of your business. Luckily, the programs reviewed here offer a flexible backup solution that will adapt to your needs and allow you to recover from situations where your operating system might have encountered a virus or malware which has corrupted your system. One example of this flexibility comes in the form of the scheduled backups. Through this method, companies can set up backups to take place automatically in a time-of-day and a date range that suits them best. With the results of their work stored in the cloud, companies can also restore files to a virtual machine to get a safe and clean copy of a system that has been compromised. It's worth pointing out, though, that the majority of these programs mention in their description that you'll also need the Office 365 backup and recovery tool, which isn't bad at all, especially as it's included in the programs being reviewed. Another important point that should be kept in mind is the fact that several of the programs we looked at have an installation wizard that you can take advantage of. By following these steps, you will be able to guide the installer through the initial phases in the process of getting all the details you need for the program up and running. A word of warning, though, is that these setups can be slightly clunky. The complexity is mainly due to the amount of time that the setup takes and the numerous steps that you have to follow. You should therefore be aware of this aspect before attempting to get the program up and running. Q: Does the world have a moral obligation to provide nutrition?
